The Jewish Question

A Classic Statement

Racial prejudice is a new phenomenon. Its history is age-old—age thick with irrational hate and persecution. To-day, and not only in Europe, we are faced with a recrudescence of this malady which is extremely dangerous to the welfare of all races.

It is well, on occasion, to reconsider our affiliations with what is right and just. Too easily can we be lured into the glitzy arms of the great rector.

Here is a classic statement by MAXIM GORKI on the Jewish Question. It was written many years ago, but it applies to conditions today in a way that makes it a timeless document.

GROUP OBSERVATION

"SALIENT" is pleased to publish the following announcement of the establishment of a Group Observation Fellowship in New Zealand. The immense importance and the varied possibilities of the man-observation technique are beyond dispute. It is to be hoped that students will offer this movement all the help they are able.

You may have noticed in the press during the past few months interest in man-observation, a method for investigating in an impartial and scientific manner the lives and opinions of people living in a great modern community. The theory of these responsible scientists is that the research was so successful in studying the life of savage peoples, to the inhabitants of the average English community. It was obvious from the beginning that isolated scientific workers in this field could not hope to immerse themselves in the life of a large community to the degree that is possible in the study of primitive groups. Therefore they enlisted the aid of the people themselves; they studied them and made the life of the people as it really was possible the behavior and opinions of their fellows. The students were sent into a central organization which analyzed the material and de duced where possible conclusions useful to science.

The success of such research depends upon the number and types of the societies that have studied; the larger and more varied the number of people who are interested in the scientific method of study and the study of group life is now being organized in New Zealand. The information is there, the material is accumulating but the task of organizing and disseminating it is the problem.

DAMNATIC CLUB
